Legislators caught up in 'schoolyard fight'

By Benjamin S. Rossi
brossi@jessaminejournal.com

Legislators on both sides of the aisle have stated that GOP Senate Majority Leader David Williams' blockade of two bills in the general assembly last Thursday, which forced the governor to call a special session this week, is nothing more than a "schoolyard fight" motivated more by personal feelings than the welfare of the commonwealth. House representatives held until midnight April 12, the final day of the session, waiting to approve the transportation budget and House Bill 4, the prescription-drug-abuse bill. Neither came, as the budget was held up by Williams and HB 4 essentially died on the Senate floor. The power play has forced 38 senators and 100 representatives into a special session with a $60,000-per-day price tag to approve a budget that for all intents and purposes has majority approval. It is not the first time that Williams has held up legislation during his term, either. Since 2000, when Williams took Senate presidency, he has called legislation into special session four times. "Once again, I — like most Kentuckians — am disgusted and angry to be in this position. Once again, it's the morning after a legislative session formally came to a close, and once again, critical business remains unfinished," Gov. Steve Beshear said in a news release. "In a demonstration of political gamesmanship at its worst, Sen. Williams adamantly declared that the Senate would not pass the highway budget until I signed the road plan first — without even reading it."

By law, the governor has 10 days to either approve or veto a bill. Williams' action was not out of fear that his projects would be vetoed in retaliation or personal feelings left over from a brutal governor's race last November but based on his "personal greed," Beshear said. "When Sen. Williams received

Infant in critical condition; father charged with assault

By Mike Moore

An 11-week-old baby boy is in critical condition at the UKHealthCare's Kentucky Children's Hospital after his father violently shook him while he was crying, according to Nicholasville police. Eric D. Arthur, 25, of Nicholasville, has been charged with first-degree assault. Nicholasville police detectives were called to the hospital because of suspicious head trauma to the boy, according to the news release. The incident happened sometime Sunday morning, Sgt. Scott Harvey said.

ERIC ARTHUR

"We were dispatched around 9:30," he said. Once detectives arrived at the hospital, their investigation culminated in the father's arrest. According to the arrest citation, Arthur "caused serious physical injury to his son by picking him up while crying and shaking him." Harvey said the injuries are life-threatening and the baby was listed in critical condition at the hospital. The charge could be upgraded, depending on the baby's recovery, Harvey said. The child's mother was not around when the incident took place, according to police. "She was not there," Harvey said. "She was somewhere else; she wasn't home is all I know." Arthur was booked into the Jessamine County Detention Center, where he remained Wednesday morning on a $10,000 full-cash bond. He was arraigned in Jessamine District Court at 8:30 a.m. Monday, and his next court appearance is scheduled for 2 p.m. April 23. The first-degree assault charge is a Class B felony, punishable by 10 to 20 years in prison, if convicted.

Jessamine County Youth Baseball began its season Saturday, April 14, at City-County Park.

The festivities began Friday, April 13, with Team Spirit Night. Each team was introduced by team name and coaches and allowed to show their spirit. Spirit awards were given to each division based off of crowd applause with the prize of a pizza party for the team who showed the most team spirit. The league is made up of six divisions including Wee Ball, T-Ball, Rookie, Minor, Major and Senior divisions. For more about Jessamine County Youth Baseball, visit jcyb.org. Nicholasville child-care sitter accused of assault

By Mike Moore

Nicholasville police arrested a child-care sitter and charged her with second-degree assault Monday. Police allege that Audrey M. Rodriguez, 50, of 142 Woodview Drive caused an elbow injury to a 10-month-old girl in her care. "This charge stems from an investigation in which detectives received information from (UKHealthCare's Kentucky Children's Hospital) that a 10-month-old child had been injured and the injuries were consistent with some type of abuse," officer Kevin Grimes said in a news release. "The child had to undergo surgery to repair her injuries."

AUDREY RODRIGUEZ

Grimes said the child was back at home with her parents. Police began investigating April 10 after the children's hospital contacted them. "It was later determined that the child was in the care of (Rodriguez) when the incident took place," Grimes said. Grimes said Rodriguez ran the child care out of her home on Woodview Drive. Police are concerned that other children in Rodriguez's care may have been abused. Anyone who has had children in Rodriguez's care is asked to call the Nicholasville Police Department at 859-885-9467. Rodriguez was arraigned in Jessamine District Court on Tuesday morning. Her next court appearance is scheduled for April 23 at 2 p.m. She was held in the Jessamine County Detention Center but later bonded out.

WILMORE 2012-2013 BUDGET

Rainwater: Jobs key to generating growth in Wilmore

By Benjamin S. Rossi
brossi@jessaminejournal.com

The Wilmore City Council has vowed to focus on the pending budget issues plaguing the city and define a plan in the next few weeks that may be hard to swallow but could be the best medicine for the small Jessamine County community.

On the second and fourth Monday of every month, until the final approval of the budget in July, the council will meet in a special session to go over each line item in the proposed fiscal year 2013 budget and compare it with FY 11's and FY 12's budgets.

The reason for the bimonthly workshops is so that the council members understand the budget explicitly and can answer the "inevitable" questions residents will ask about the possible cuts or changes that may be made in the coming year to trim the fat and raise revenue.

"The residents of Wilmore need to know what the cost of living in the city really is," councilman Jeff James said.

Mayor Harold Rainwater agreed and said that the budget cannot be approached the same way it was in previous years. When Rainwater started in the 1970s, Wilmore had a budget of $50,000; this year, it is nearly $1 million, with an added $100,000 set aside for street and road repair.

"If you don't like this budget or you want to increase the budget, the council will have to move money around or find a way to fund it by adding some-

Businesses may owe city up to $75,000 in back taxes

By Benjamin S. Rossi
brossi@jessaminejournal.com

More than 280 businesses have been identified as delinquent in occupational taxes owed to the city of Wilmore that may total as much as $75,000.

Those same businesses that continue to do work in Wilmore in the future have the potential of bringing in as much as $36,000 per year if the city moves forward with collecting.

The estimation and revenue forecast was made by Municipal Revenue Solutions, LLC, spearheaded by Lisle Cheatham, founder and third-term mayor of Greensburg.

If those figures are accurate and collections are made, in the current economic climate of Wilmore, that revenue can easily fund equipment/body armor for the police department ($7,200) and equipment for the fire department ($21,150) during fiscal year 2013, according to the current proposed budget.

However, there would be the added cost to the budget for the city-hall staff, Wilmore Police Department and payout to MRS that is not currently in the budget.

The blame for delinquent accounts is not entirely on the negligence of the businesses operating in the city but can partially be attributed to the city not actively pursuing the owed revenue, Mayor Harold Rainwater said.

The business were identified in a proposal by MRS made three years ago, when Wilmore put down a $5,000 retainer fee for it to engage a tax-amnesty contract that would identify delinquent businesses and help recovery lost fees.

Of the businesses identified, many were contractors not physically located in Wilmore who did business within city limits, such as delivery services and construction companies.

Businesses as close as the Animal Hospital of Nicholasville and as far as CrimeStar Corporation in San Jose, Calif., were on the list identified by MRS, with only a very small number of businesses physically located in Wilmore.

Cheatham's suggestion to the current Wilmore City Council was to re-engage a new tax amnesty that would last until December.

This would give a fair amount of time for businesses new and old to become compliant or else face misdemeanor charges, he said.

Cheatham presented the current status of MRS's involvement, which ended in March of 2011, that states MRS had collected past-due receipts in the amount of $7,077.30. After the retainer, which may or may not be waived at this point, the city will retain 100 percent of the first $10,000 collected, with 35 percent after that kept by MRS. After more than $150,001 is reached, MRS would only retain 25 percent of collected fees.

According to Cheatham, his company has identified $1.6 million of taxable revenue generated in Wilmore's jurisdiction yearly.

MRS's current proposal is still being modified, but Cheatham suggested his company may waive the $5,000 retainer and continue from the original contract, and also lower the percentage they take from recovered revenue since both financial director Hayley Ellis and city clerk Phyllis Sallee will be taking on a fair amount of the work and business notifications.

The council has not decided to move forward with MRS, but Rainwater said that it is a line item in the budget, which will be discussed Monday during a special work session held at city hall to focus on the FY 13 budget.

thing," he said. "There is also the bigger picture with questions which will need other meetings and discussions by the council."

Looking for revenue in the bigger picture

While going over the budget, Rainwater said the council needs to consider other future issues that will ultimately be affected, such as whether or not to stay in the solid waste business, buy a new truck, move to a one-day-a-week pickup or outsource the responsibility to another company entirely.

"No one can do it better than we can," Rainwater said, "but we also can't be using a truck weekly that's nearly 12 years old."

Other issues Rainwater raised to the council were:

- How aggressive does the city want to be about getting new business?
- How does the city feel about business encroaching into residential areas and the annexation of land for that purpose?

• How can the city bring in more jobs?

But there are no easy answers. Overall, the city's revenue is down. The once-lucrative promise of impact fees is drying up and the city is forced to consider rearranging their priorities, raising taxes or finding new revenue streams.

Rainwater said that 40-45 years ago the city issued stickers to motor vehicles and charged everyone who used the city's streets.

"I don't think we're very far away from doing that," councilwoman Kim Deyer said. "That is something that other cities already do."

The small sticker fee would mostly affect new Asbury University and Asbury Theological Seminary students with cars who arrive each year, but Rainwater said "some revenue is better than none."

"There are 6,000 people with four banks and $50 million on deposit in Wilmore,” Rainwater said. “There’s money here somewhere, and it’s moving.”

A2: WILMORE

Impact fees in theory

Wilmore’s finical director and treasurer Hayley Ellis went over a rough draft of the FY 13 proposed budget to the city council during the second special work session last Monday. Ellis and councilman James Brumfield had balanced the proposal.

“Overall, the total operating revenue for the city is down $120,000,” Ellis said. “A lot of that’s due to miscellaneous revenue, which was hard to figure out from fiscal year 2012 because a lot of it was in adjustments.”

Ellis’ report also showed a significant decrease in franchise tax and impact fees.

“There is no budget for impact fees (in the report),” Ellis said. “Even though we may collect some, they don’t really go toward operation expenses anyway.”

About five to seven years ago, the city council was betting on the promise of new residential and business growth and passed an ordinance to apply impact fees, Rainwater said.

“There were additional subdivisions we were anticipating coming our way that were going to expand the city’s need for more police, more fire, more parks and rec, et cetera ... to adequately service them,” he said. “We already had the impact fees from water and sewer to offset that (growth) and 85 percent of that being escrowed back.”

However, growth fizzled out around 2007, and today, the city is in a different “operational mode” and needs to decide whether to keep and/or increase those impact fees, Rainwater said.

“In a sense, we had money to pay for growth as long as there was continual growth, and with no new community or businesses, there were no impact fees being collected,” Rainwater said. “In theory, if you have no growth, you have no need for impact fees, because the impact fees were to impact the new people coming into the community to pay their way.”

At the time, the city council had a golf course on the planning docket potentially worth $3.5 million in impact fees, Rainwater said. The council was also expecting new communities with houses worth $500,000 and townhomes ranging from $250,000 to $350,000 to be built in the near future.

“(Are impact fees) something we need to think about differently from this point on?” James asked the mayor and council.

“I think growth will eventually occur and the impact fees will be needed,” Rainwater replied. “I don’t know that we can tax more than we already do today to grow those services without creating more jobs. We have a structure in place that adequately funds the city through the payroll tax — if we start to create jobs.

Job creation — a tough business

James told the council he recently spoke with people in the business community who are considering bringing jobs into Wilmore and that the city council can help facilitate their move.

“We desperately need jobs, and we need to diversify our base; that’s the first part of it — no question,” he said. “I think we should always be open to diversity.”

Rainwater said his family has done business in Wilmore for many years.

“It’s a tough town to do business in,” he said. “It is a struggle day-in and day-out. But it can be done. (The council) just needs to decide how to do it.”

The city council spent the rest of last Monday night looking over the rough draft of the general administration, police and fire department and other line items in the budget before adjourning, vowing to return and tackle the ever-present issues still hanging over the city of Wilmore.

Rainwater said he is confident that growth would return and these meetings are a good step in positioning the city for when it does.

“This is the biggest head start in my 40-some years here,” Rainwater said. “I’m grateful to have a rough draft and be working on this two months ahead of time.”

By law, the council has until July 1 to approve a balanced budget.

Cassidy elected to SWACK

By Mike Moore
mmoore@jessaminejournal.com

Jessamine County’s director of environmental services was elected vice-chair of the Solid Waste Coordinators of Kentucky (SWACK) during that group’s spring meeting in early April.

Mike Cassidy was elected by his peers to serve as vice chairman on the executive board. In this new role, he will assist in planning relevant workshops for state-wide training and attend meetings with state lawmakers.

“The chairman of the organization talked to me a couple weeks before the last meeting,” Cassidy said. “He asked me if I would be interested, and he nominated me for the election.”

SWACK represents solid-waste coordinators throughout the state, providing training and working closely with the Kentucky Division of Waste Management. The organization was instrumental in introducing and lobbying lawmakers for the waste-tire bill that created funds to assist counties in properly disposing of waste tires.

Cassidy said one of the goals of SWACK is to help tweak the paperwork process for local agencies.

“We are trying to rework the ways we do our reports to make it easier on the local government,” he said. “We are also trying to revamp the waste-tire bill so local governments will get more of an impact from that bill.”

SWACK also assisted with creating the Kentucky Pride Fund, the first legislated and ongoing source of state funding for dump cleanup, household hazardous waste collection and recycling infrastructure, in addition to illegal dump and old landfill projects.

Cassidy has been director of Jessamine County Environmental Services since November 2009. Under his leadership, the county has been awarded more than $500,000 in grants to improve and/or implement programs such as expanded recycling locations, household-hazardous-waste disposal, as well as many other services.

Jessamine County Judge-Executive Neal Cassidy said he feels Cassidy will be an asset to the state with the position.

“Jessamine County is proud of the accomplishments of Environmental Services Director Mike Cassidy and his nomination to serve as vice chairman of the Solid Waste Coordinators of Kentucky,” Cassidy said. “Jessamine County has benefited tremendously from his knowledge of solid waste issues and his grant writing skills. Jessamine County Environmental Services is a model for other counties thanks to Mike Cassidy’s leadership and the dedication of the Jessamine County Convenience Center employees.”

Jessamine public library puts Nooks on the books

By Jonathan Kleppinger
jkleppinger@jessaminejournal.com

The Jessamine County Public Library is one of the first libraries in the state to check out e-readers to its patrons, kicking off the program with an event Monday.

The library purchased 25 Nook devices from Barnes and Noble, 20 Simple Readers and five Nook Colors. Each device includes preloaded with books from different genres like fiction bestsellers, cookbooks and popular nonfiction, with the color Nooks focused on children's books.

"It's a new technology, and it's something that we want the residents of the county to have access to and give it a chance to try it before they buy it, or if they can't purchase their own device, they can still enjoy books in that way," said adult-services librarian Sara King.

Patrons can check a Nook out for a period of three weeks, renewing one time if there are no holds on the device. Checkout also requires signing a user agreement with rules and replacement costs. King said she doesn't have worries about lending the devices that can cost $200 to replace.

"We've talked to other libraries in Kentucky and in other states who lend e-readers, and they actually don't have a lot of problems with loss and damage and stuff like that," King said.

The library kicked off the Nook program with an event Monday at 1 p.m.; by 3 p.m., nine or 10 of the e-readers had already been checked out, King said.

"We're really excited about doing this," she said. "We hope people come and try it out."

Library doesn't get expansion funding

By Jonathan Kleppinger
jkleppinger@jessaminejournal.com

The expansion project at the crowded Jessamine County Public Library is right back where it was a year ago after a grant program didn't make the cut in the state budget.

The Kentucky Public Library Facilities Construction Grant Program would have benefited 23 library expansions in Kentucky by paying a portion of the debt service for 20 years, but the state legislature did not provide the $2 million in 2012-2013 and the $4 million in 2013-2014 necessary for the project.

"I worked alongside 22 other library directors to lobby for public library construction funds during this recent legislative session," JCPL executive director Ron Critchfield said. "Unfortunately, the climate in Frankfort was not conducive to funding many projects at this time."

Critchfield said there was a "slim possibility" that the legislature might fund the projects during next year's session, but for now, it's up to JCPL to find money for a proposed $5 million expansion that would double the meeting space, the public-computer area and the children's library.

The number of educational programs at JCPL and attendance at the programs has more than doubled in the past four years. Library visits have increased from about 197,000 to more than 240,000 a year in the last four years, and the library has about 536,000 circulation items — nearly 150,000 more than it had four years ago.

One-third of the library's collection is checked out at any given time, Critchfield said, and the shelves would overflow if just half of those were returned at one time.

"The question is not what could happen (if an expansion doesn't materialize), but rather what problems are we having now?" Critchfield said. "We are out of space now and experiencing increasing numbers of visitors, program attendees, and items checked out. We are below state library standards in space needed and in the amount spent on the collection for a county our size."

As the number of library programs increases, there is less space and time for community use of the meeting area.

"JCPL would love to offer a free venue for birthday parties, community meetings, family gatherings, even a free space for a wedding reception of 300 or so guests," Critchfield said. "This could be possible with expanded meeting-room space."

With about $550,000 in the bank for the expansion right now and an estimate that $1 million more can be saved before an expansion is completed, the library is left with a funding gap of about $4 million.

Critchfield said the ideal scenario would be to receive millions from a donor and commence construction six months later. He said a "more realistic" scenario would involve a capital campaign that would need to raise $4 million if the state does not assist in 2013 and $3 million if it does.

Jessamine County's representatives in the state legislature, Sen. Tom Buford and Rep. Bob Damron, both said before the session that the expansion was needed but that adequate resources may not be available for the state to help fund it.

"I'm very much in favor of trying to help the libraries move forward," Buford said in December. "There's a tremendous amount of traffic in all public libraries, and we've got to keep them up to date."

Critchfield said the library is looking into other grants but that the outlook there is bleak.

"There are a couple of grant opportunities we will pursue but, again, in this economic climate grants are difficult to receive," he said. "This is due to the fact that a large numbers of institutions are competing for a limited amount of funds."

A green Ford van flipped over a curb into South Main Street on Wednesday afternoon. The driver, 22-year-old Jesse Clay Reece of 8939 Sulphur Well Road, faces charges of fleeing or evading police, driving with a suspended license and DUI.

Man charged with DUI after flipping van on Main St.

A Jessamine County man flipped his van on South Main Street while a sheriff's deputy was following him Wednesday, April 11.

Jesse Clay Reece, 22, of 8939 Sulphur Well Road faces charges of fleeing or evading police, driving with a suspended license and DUI.

The Jessamine County dispatch office sent out a call to try to locate a green van around 2 p.m. April 11. Sheriff's deputy Ben Snyder located the van making a right turn onto Miles Road from South Central Avenue and "driving erratically at a high rate of speed," sheriff's spokesman Larry Oliver said.

JESSE REECE

Snyder did not activate his emergency equipment, Oliver said, but got turned around and tried to follow the van. By the time Snyder had caught up and saw the van, Reece was on Longview Drive approaching South Main Street.

The van entered a gravel parking lot off Longview and continued into a paved portion of the lot before hitting a curb and turning over, coming to rest on its driver's side in the center of South Main Street at the intersection with Kimberly Heights.

Reece did not attempt to flee after the accident, Oliver said; he was handcuffed and transported to Saint Joseph-Jessamine RJ Corman Ambulatory Care Center with minor injuries.

Oliver said authorities did not find any outstanding warrants on Reece.

Reece appeared in Jessamine District Court on Monday and was appointed a public defender; no further court dates had been set as of Tuesday afternoon.

Woman who hit house sentenced to 30 days

A Nicholasville woman was sentenced to 30 days in jail after hitting a house last Friday. Michelle Glass, 33, pleaded guilty Monday to DUI and leaving the scene of an accident charges, according to court records.

MICHELLE GLASS

According to police, Glass missed her turn Friday morning and hit a house on Shun Pike. Glass then backed out and fled the scene and went home. She was later arrested.

Julia Highnight was inside the home when the incident occurred. She was sleeping on a couch on the wall where Glass hit the house and Highnight was thrown across the room. She was treated and released from the hospital with minor injuries.

Fire department to test hydrants

The Nicholasville Fire Department is conducting its annual fire-hydrant testing through the month of April. During the remainder of the month, firefighters will be releasing water from the more than 1,400 hydrants throughout the city. Deputy fire chief Kevin Baker said residents should not experience any major disruptions in their water service.

Brehm named principal at Garden Springs

West Jessamine High School assistant principal Jimmy Brehm has been named the principal at Garden Springs Elementary in Lexington starting in the 2012-2013 school year.

Brehm was introduced Monday at Garden Springs. He will retain his current duties at West Jessamine High School through the end of the school year.

In a message to school staff Monday night, Brehm said he had been privileged to spend six years around the high school as a coach and assistant principal and that the greatest part of his job had been working with students, staff and a community that "believe ardently that education provides students with the opportunities they deserve."

JIMMY BREHM

Brehm has spent seven years in Jessamine County, coaching baseball at East Jessamine before teaching fifth grade at Nicholasville Elementary and then seventh grade at West Jessamine Middle. He has served as an assistant principal at West High for the last two years and coached softball there for four years from 2007-2010.

Trial date set for man indicted on possession of child porn

Robert Wharff, 24, pleaded not guilty last Friday in circuit court via video to charges of 21 counts of possession of matters portraying the sexual performance of a minor and one count of distribution of the same material.

Wharff's trial date has been set for 9 a.m. June 4.

Jessamine County sheriff's deputies arrested Wharff after the Jessamine County grand jury indictment, based on evidence provided by the attorney general's office in Lexington, on March 23.

He remains in the Jessamine County Detention Center on a $50,000 full-cash bond.

Fiscal court preps for budget issues

By Benjamin S. Rossi
brossi@jessaminejournal.com

The Jessamine County Fiscal Court has the budget on the back burner for now but was able to cross off a few items and consider other issues during Tuesday night's meeting.

One budget item that will remain the same is the contract with Transportation Task Force supervisor Nancy Stone. She had originally proposed to take on additional work, but the court chose to only renew her current contract.

Another item the court took care of was to approve the 20-year lease of the John Preece Sports Complex to the Kentucky Pro Football Hall of Fame Facility Board for $1. The lease is a part of several requirements the nonprofit needs in order to apply for federal and state grants in its pursuit to build the first pro football hall of fame in Kentucky. The fiscal court reserves the right to revoke the lease in the case that "substandard" facilities are built on the complex, county attorney Brian Goettl said.

As for a lower expense in the next fiscal year's budget, Teg Evans from the Bluegrass Arts Association stated before the court that his nonprofit organization would not be requesting funds this year.

"I just wanted to thank the fiscal court," he said, "and I hope you continue to support the arts."

Evans said it was unfortunate because a 501(c)(3) was very difficult to obtain and maintain, especially after all the work and concerts his organization had put on over the years.

In other business, the fiscal court:

- approved of Bobby Sams move to the position of community service supervisor. His duties will be to maintain county roads, including mowing, ice removal, landscape and trash detail. Sams has been with the department since 2004 and was recommended by Coleman Tudor. There is no change in pay rate, title only.
- accepted Tim Stotts' resignation from the road department, effective March 30.
- accepted Larry Hensely with EMS to move from full-time to part-time employee during his two weeks before his resignation.
- accepted Gene Roberts' resignation from the Jessamine County Fleet Services.
- called for a special meeting 4 p.m. Friday, April 20, to consider bids and recommendations concerning E-911 equipment.

EAST JESSAMINE VS. WEST JESSAMINE

Baker delivers in West's 5-1 win over East

By Jonathan Stark
jstark@jessaminejournal.com

It's been three years since West Jessamine's softball team defeated East Jessamine, but the Lady Colts made it look easy as they knocked off the Lady Jaguars 5-1 on Tuesday night at West.

Heading into the bottom of the sixth inning, East and West were locked in a 1-1 tie. The Lady Colts were struggling at the plate as East pitcher Halee Hamm had retired nine in a row. Hamm sat down the first two batters in the sixth to run her total to 11 straight.

West's Alyson Archer was finally able to break up the skid with a single to center field; and Samantha Cross followed with a four-pitch walk to put runners on first and second base.

"I told them before the game that you don't want to go extra innings with a team like East," West Jessamine coach Michelle Baker said. "I told them they hold their own destiny in the district. I think our district is pretty wide open this year. I told them that if they want to win games, they have to put themselves in the driver's seat."

Jessica Baker stepped to the plate with an RBI already to her credit on the night. She hit a bloop fly ball to shallow left field that was dropped and allowed Archer and Cross to score and give West a 3-1 lead.

"Jessica Baker came up big for us today," coach Baker said. "She's been a big help to us this year."

"All of their runs came off errors or where we should have made plays; that's kind of been the handicap of us all year," East Jessamine coach Tom Hamm said. "We got to cut the errors out of the game."

A single by Kelsey Garrett extended the inning, and an infield hit by Sarah Baker coupled with a throwing error allowed Jessica Baker and Garrett to score and push the lead to 5-1.

In the top of the seventh, Garrett, who was in the circle, got two quick outs before Haleigh Fain singled to center field. West got the last out as Fain attempted to steal second base during the next at bat but was thrown out retreating to first base.

Garrett allowed one run on six hits, four walks and a hit batter. She struck out one.

The Lady Colts took a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the second inning as Jessica Baker singled to left-center field to score Cross from second.

East tied the game 1-1 on fielder's choice by Felicia Farmer, that scored Fain.

The Lady Jags fell to 5-13 on the season; they lost 11 games all of last season. "I think we'll turn things around. We're a young team and play like a young team," Hamm said. "I think they need to find a leader; that's what they're missing the most."

The Lady Colts are 8-10; the win stops a three-game skid for West. Baker said for the first time this season all 18 players showed up ready to play and win, but in the end, this game was no different than any other and that West needed to show up like that for every game.

"We needed a turning point this season," Baker said. "We've been on and off. Some days they play well; some days they don't play well. Hopefully this will be turning point for us."

West last defeated East Jessamine in 2009 with a 4-2 win in the district championship. West also won the regular-season duel that season.

East's Beazley signs with Asbury

By Mike Moore
mmoore@jessaminejournal.com

East Jessamine volleyball player Halee Beazley will take her on-court and academic talents to Asbury University in the fall after signing her national letter of intent to play for the Lady Eagles.

Asbury coach JP Rader said Beazley and the Lady Eagles are a perfect match in many ways.

"Halee has a fantastic attitude and a great work ethic. I think she's gonna bring those, plus her energy on the floor is something that I saw last season, and that's another element, too," Rader said. "All those things combined are going to help her. She's going to be working her way into our program, but I think she will make huge strides her first year. She's just the type of kid that we're looking for at Asbury."

For Beazley, it was Asbury or bust.

"I didn't look at any other schools; Asbury was my number-one pick," she said. "It wasn't difficult at all because I really like the school and I really like their volleyball program. They're amazingly good."

Asbury posted a 41-11 record in the fall and was 14-1 in its conference.

East Jessamine coach Steve Schweitzer said Asbury is getting a well-rounded player in Beazley.

"She's a super passer. She's definitely going to be an asset in the back row, and she's a good at ball control," he said. "I've coached her for the past couple of years, and anytime a ball goes to her, I know it's going to the setter, so that's a good thing."

Schweitzer said moving from high-school to college volleyball and life in general should not be a problem for Beazley.

"Halee is well grounded in her belief and her family, and I think that's going to help out a lot," he said. "She's pretty secure, so when she goes to college, I don't think she's going to face a lot of those things that freshmen go through, plus Asbury's a perfect fit for her being local."

Beazley plans to study education at Asbury University.

Providence's Jessamine Proud a local 'jewel'

A novel idea startled me into action. I'm attending an event this weekend where gaggles of ladies "ooh and aah" over gift baskets given as door prizes. Secretly, all the basket-assemblers want to have made the most coveted basket of all.

I've decided to assemble a basket in tribute to my native state. All the other ladies hail from North Carolina, so the delights of Bluegrass living are unknown to them. My problem? Where could I locate an assortment of affordable, Kentucky-made items with which to make my masterpiece?

My brainstorm was to visit the Jessamine Proud Products store at The Providence School right here in Wilmore. I'm a genius. Friendly smiles greeted me at the door.

RHONDA DRAGOMIR

Intelligently located right off the parking lot, there was no need for me to wander the school hallways looking for the store. I was immediately greeted by beautifully arranged merchandise ready for purchase, all of it made by local artisans and students of TPS.

I approached a young man for help in making selections. Josh Grigsby is a tall, good-looking guy, friendly and upbeat. He introduced me to Merrelyn Carmichael, a teacher who works with students at the store.

She gave me background on the makers of the items, including beautiful pottery and jewelry made by TPS students. Some were made by teachers, bus drivers and friends of TPS students and staff. The store gives the merchandise a very gentle markup, keeps track of items purchased from the separate vendors, and settles accounts with them as sales are completed.

I eagerly picked up some homemade salsa, a wooden birdhouse, and a dried-gourd jewelry box. I also purchased a pair of UK blue earrings. A good Wildcat fan should never pass up an opportunity to needle fans from Duke and Carolina, especially this year.

It didn't take long to exceed my $30 budget. The best gift baskets have many inexpensive items instead of one large splurge. I'll admit it was hard to resist the hand-turned wooden bowls, crocheted purses, and items made from fabric produced locally on a loom. They weren't in my budget this time, but I won't forget where I can find them.

Josh dutifully carried my items since there were no shopping carts in sight, and when it came time for checkout, he wrote up my selections line by line, totaled the bill on the cash register, and helped me complete my purchase.

I walked out of the Jessamine Proud store with my heart a little lighter but also a little heavier. I was excited to witness the store in operation and see first-hand the opportunities for learning it presents. Retail sales experience is a building block for many careers. The only twinge of sadness I felt was when I wondered how many customers they actually have on any given day. I was the only shopper there for half an hour.

The experience reinforced the very positive opinion I've always had of The Providence School, students and staff. When I asked Josh if he enjoyed the school, his honestly smiling face agreed with his opinion. "I really like it here," he said, and proudly told me he will graduate in a few weeks and attend Berea College this fall.

I've stated before my strong support for alternative educational opportunities for Jessamine County students and my admiration for the TPS program. It is a jewel, and so is the Jessamine Proud store. I'm already planning my next visit.

Besides, the door prizes at the women's event are given out by random drawing. Maybe I'll win my own basket. Believe me, I'll not be disappointed.

The store hours are 9-11:30 a.m., or call 887-4600, ext. 2638 for an appointment.

Effort to combat bullying would punish too much speech

The First Amendment's protection for free speech seems fairly unlimited — an unambiguous provision included in just 45 simple words that begin with "Congress shall make no law ..."

No intricate phrases, no flowery modifiers. We even have a common way of restating the idea: "I can say what I want; I'm an American." But that doesn't mean there are no limits, restrictions or rules.

Words involved in criminal activity — say, solicitation for prostitution — are not protected speech. Defamatory statements are subject to legal action after being written or uttered, to make good the damage unfairly done. Words that carry no penalty when spoken at, say, high noon in the public square can prompt an arrest at 3 a.m. under a bedroom window. Seemingly innocuous words uttered repeatedly to an unwilling recipient reach the level of harassment.

And we cannot make "true threats" against another person.

This particular exception to First Amendment protections seems simple enough. But even here we can have complex legal issues.

Case in point: A recent Arizona legislative proposal intended to combat cyberstalking and online bullying. Supporters say the proposed bill just revises existing law to include a new kind of media. But critics say it opens wide a door to potential constitutional violations by making it a crime to offend or annoy others.

No one is defending attacks on others via the Internet. Rather, critics of the measure say it fails to make important distinctions.

Groups ranging from book-sellers to music companies to broadcasters have called on Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer, urging a veto of the bill. Lawmakers have since agreed to take another look at the legislation.

Among potential First Amendment issues that critics have identified:

- The proposal fails to distinguish between harassing speech delivered one-to-one, such as in an e-mail or telephone call, and harsh or offending speech on a Web posting intended for the public with no specific individual intended as a target.
- The bill's terms are vague or unexplained, leaving the possibility of prosecution for language that may be offensive but historically lacks the basis for criminal charges.

The potential to chill legitimate — if contentious — speech merits this second look by the legislature.

Clearly, the Web provides ways for launching anonymous, unrelenting attacks against people — particularly young people. But the Web also has provided new opportunities for people to air views outside the acceptable, mainstream order of things. Many online discussions include frank — and sometimes profane or lewd — speech, which while offensive is not in and of itself illegal.

A law that purports to parse and punish speech that gives rise to criminal conduct but which is not intended to apply to merely crude behavior ought to use specific language and terms that define exactly what it means.

Those 45 words that protect free speech deserve that kind of careful wording.

the funding plan, it already included $288 million in projects for his district — $288 million — over $130 million of which was to be funded in the near term,” he said. “But that wasn’t good enough for Sen. Williams.”

The Transportation Cabinet’s $2.4 billion budget includes all funds allocated to build and maintain roads in the commonwealth but it also authorizes snow and ice removal, traffic management planning and bridge inspections.

Jessamine projects

In Jessamine County, that includes the nearly half-million-dollar secondary rural road project that was approved by the Jessamine County Fiscal Court last week and the proposed U.S. 27 access management plan.

“The positive thing for Jessamine County is all the road projects are still intact, and the governor has told me he will not veto any of them,” Rep. Bob Damron, D-Nicholasville, said. “As soon as the Senate passes the funding bill, I know all of our road projects will be good and move our community forward with a much better transportation system. It’s not a huge document, but it’s critical that it gets passed.”

Damron said overall the general assembly was “relatively successful” until it all fell apart last week.

“Our members are not happy about having to come back into special session. I don’t think the taxpayers are happy about us doing that either, but the House had no option because we didn’t have a bill,” Damron said. “To be honest, we’re extremely surprised (Williams) didn’t go ahead and pass that last piece of legislation for us to consider and close the session out on time. For Williams to try to force the governor to try to sign his bills, without allowing him and his staff to review them, I think is wrong.”

Currently, the Republican party holds the majority in the Kentucky Senate with 22 members to 15 democrats (and one Independent). In the House of representatives, Democrats hold a majority of 59 to 41.

“I know the Democratic leadership was in favor of passing the bill as it was ... the governor is very frustrated, and I don’t think most of the Senate members, Republican and Democrat, are happy about it either,” Damron said. “It boils down to one or two individuals in the Senate making those decisions.”

Another “essential piece of legislation” that Williams’ actions hurt had a lot of bipartisan support, Beshear said.

HB 4, or the “pill mill bill” meant to curb prescription drug abuse, however, Sen. Tom Burford, R-Nicholasville, does not agree that it was entirely Williams’ fault.

“The issue of the pill-mill bill is another piece of the battle of the war on drugs, which has not worked too good,” Burford said. “But I think we had a resolution going into the final days when Attorney General Jack Conway wrote an editorial criticizing the medical profession.”

After that, Burford said legislatures were “nervous” to put all of KASPER (Kentucky All Schedule Prescription Electronic Reporting) into the AG’s office. Burford said that comments came from Conway’s office that stated the Kentucky Medical Licensing Board had not done enough to police itself and should go through to the attorney general’s office, instead.

“That would make him a judge to some degree, and I think the medical profession became offended and came to fight to rearrange the bill that gutted some of the powers having to deal with it,” Buford said. “I don’t think that was (Conway’s) intention; it was probably to get us to vote for the bill, but it caused a problem and the bill died in the latest stage.”

As far as the pressure on the governor to sign the road projects, Buford said he can see how the last election and a veto by Beshear of Williams’ already-funded projects two years ago would cause discord and mistrust between the two.

“I think Williams wanted to make sure that didn’t happen again,” he said. “However, the governor still has control over all the road programs and can veto. So this is really just a schoolyard fight that all the other legislators got caught up in. I think we all agree the road plan should be passed — we all voted for it.”

Current status of general assembly

House Speaker Greg Stumbo, D-Prestonsburg, refiled HB 4 on Monday at noon and also a highway funding plan identical to the plan proposed last week.

On Tuesday, the House approved both bills that are now before the Senate, where their fate is undetermined.

As of Wednesday morning,

Beshear had still not given in to pressure to approve Williams’ road plans. The Senate president has vowed to the Senate not to give Beshear the chance to veto his road plans.

The standoff may continue the special session into next week.

Damron and Buford said many legislators had concerns as far back as January that there would be problems between the governor and Senate president; however, they are positive the general assembly will wrap up by Friday with the road plan passed, and “hopefully” the pill-mill bill, as well.

“It’s a difficult thing — the two men battled each other in the governor’s race, no doubt setting the stage for discord between the two — (but) I think that patience and being reserved personalities they will bring it to a conclusion as we meet this week,” Buford said. “In the governors’ official document for a call to session, it mentions David Williams’ name in it, and that is highly unusual and is probably throwing gasoline on the fire. I know they both have said things that I imagine they regret, even though they may not admit it, but even with that, I do think we will resolve this week.”

Williams did not respond to multiple attempts by The Jessamine Journal for comment.

Racers compete in eclectic event winding across Jessamine County

By Jonathan Kleppinger
jkleppinger@jessaminejournal.com

Twenty-eight racers traversed Wilmore and southwestern Jessamine County on Saturday in a race that combined service and adventure — the signature of the ministry that sponsored it.

Confrontation Point Ministries started the adventure race at its property off Campground Lane in Wilmore — the same land that had hosted the Wilmore Camp Meeting for 120 years until Confrontation Point bought it in October 2010. Saturday's race included 11 teams of two and six individual competitors.

Racers began just after 9 a.m., running about 3 miles through downtown Wilmore and out High Bridge Road before turning right on Shanty Hill Road and following a gravel road all the way down to the bank of the Kentucky River.

On the river, individuals in kayaks and teams in canoes paddled downriver to a shanty-boat checkpoint where the Moron Brothers serenaded them with Bluegrass music. Once returning to the launch point, racers took a steep half-mile trail run up to the Asbury University challenge course, where they quickly made their way through obstacles before hopping on their bicycles.

Back out Shanty Hill Road, the bikers hung a right on High Bridge Road and followed it all the way to High Bridge Park, where a surprise building challenge with several wood blocks awaited them.

"That's pretty CPish," said racer and CP volunteer Roger Brock. "I work here, and we do a lot of going on the fly, figuring out what we have to do, and I think this race incorporated some of that."

Once the small structure was properly assembled, they biked back up High Bridge Road all the way into Wilmore and finished the last long leg of their journey back at Confrontation Point — but the race was not over.

At the campground, racers took part in a tree-planting checkpoint made possible by donations from UBS bank and nonprofit organization Blessed Earth. CP executive director Andy Bathje said the tree-planting was especially appropriate as they maintained the property that had deep spiritual meaning for many. The Ichthus music festival was held on the campground for decades.

"You can just imagine how many people felt the Lord speak to them out here, from camp meeting and Ichthus, Great Commission Fellowship Church meeting out here, and a lot of them just walking their dogs out here and just reflecting upon the Lord in the shade of a good tree," Bathje said.

Confrontation Point is seeking donations to plant another 25 trees in the coming months.

Racers completed a disc-golf hole before finally ending in the "finishers' cage," a tall cylinder that Confrontation Point also uses to collect recycling at Ichthus each year.

Georgetown's Sharlyn Golding won the race, stepping into the finishers' cage around 10:30 a.m. She is a member of a central Kentucky McDonald's cycling team but said she enjoyed all the different elements of Saturday's race, though the construction challenge slowed her down the most.

"I didn't quite get the flag where it needed to be," she said. "I was there building for about eight minutes. He finally said, 'The flag is OK.'"

Confrontation Point hosts more than 50 groups each year for service projects including home repair, tornado relief, environmental conservation, recycling and urban work.

"All of our trips, the goal is to give these groups, teams of often young people, chances to live out their faith by serving others and doing it in a way where they have to take control and figure out how to build a handicapped ramp or whatever it might be," Bathje said.

"The purpose of this race with that combo of adventure and service is the signature of who Confrontation Point is as a mission organization, and the purpose was to raise funds for the good works that we do throughout the year."

This was the inaugural year of the race; Bathje said it will become an annual event.

"A lot of the racers have already said they're coming back," he said as the last racers finished. "I'm hearing great things; people are having a great time."

addition to the physical conditioning program, Barbery spent numerous hours in classroom and field assignments that included learning first aid, uniform regulations, combat water survival, marksmanship, hand-to-hand combat and assorted weapons training. They per-

Norway killer expounds on fanatical views at trial

By KARL RITTER

Associated Press

OSLO, Norway (AP) — In a scene unimaginable in many countries, Norway's worst mass killer got the chance to explain his fanatical views to the court and the world, unrepentant and dressed in a business suit. Prosecutors and lawyers for the families of his 77 victims even shook his hand.

Two days into Anders Behring Breivik's terror trial, the way Norway's legal system deals with a confessed killer who rejects its authority is baffling — even to some Norwegians.

The 33-year-old far-right militant gave a rambling hour-long address to the court on Tuesday, reading from a statement that essentially summarized the 1,500-page anti-Islamic manifesto he posted online before his bomb-and-shooting rampage nine months ago.

“The attacks on July 22 were a preventive strike. I acted in self-defense on behalf of my people, my city, my country,” Breivik declared, demanding to be found innocent of terror and murder charges. “I would have done it again.”

Breivik has five days to explain why he detonated a bomb outside government headquarters in Oslo, killing eight people, then drove to a nearby resort island, where he massacred 69 others, mostly teens, at a summer youth camp run by the governing Labor Party.

Breivik, who has admitted carrying out the grisly acts, boasted they were the most “spectacular” by a nationalist militant since World War II.

His victims were part of a conspiracy to “deconstruct” Norway's cultural identity, he said. Comparing the Labor Party youth wing to the Hitler Youth, he called their annual summer gathering an “indoctrination” camp.

Breivik also lashed out at Norwegian and European governments for embracing immigration and multiculturalism, and claimed to be speaking as a commander of an anti-Islam militant group he called the Knights Templar — a group that prosecutors say does not exist.

At one point, Breivik even likened his attacks to the U.S. dropping atomic bombs on Japan to bring World War II to an end. “They did it for something good, to prevent further war,” Breivik said.

The court's main judge interrupted repeatedly, admonishing Breivik to get to the point, but let him continue after he threatened to quit addressing the court altogether if he wasn't allowed to deliver his entire speech.

“It is critically important that I can explain the reason and the motive” for the massacre, he said.

Mette Yvonne Larsen, a lawyer representing victim's families, also interrupted Breivik, saying she had received complaints from victims that the defendant was turning the trial into a platform for his extremist views. But even she showed some sympathy for Breivik's right to explain his actions.

“We understand that the court allows it, but we felt it was our duty as lawyers for the bereaved to intervene,” Larsen told reporters.

Norwegian legal experts said it was important that the country's legal traditions apply to everyone, even Breivik, whose massacre shocked this prosperous, peaceful nation.

The justice system isn't about “revenge, but sober, dignified treatment” for everyone accused of a crime, said Thomas Mathiesen, a professor of sociology of law at the University of Oslo.

“It is deeply ingrained in Norwegian tradition and fundamental values. If it lasts all the way through the 10 weeks of this trial, and I think it will, we have an important message to the world,” he said.

When Breivik entered the courtroom on Tuesday, he delivered the same clenched-fist salute with his right arm outstretched as a day earlier, turning to stare at the families of some of his victims.

On Monday, Norwegian prosecutors and even lawyers representing the families of victims shook Breivik's hand as the trial opened, raising some eyebrows. Prosecutors shaking hands with defendants would be a rare sight in the U.S., as well as in neighboring Sweden and other Nordic nations.

“That was a bit strange,” said John Christian Elden, who represents some survivors but is not participating in the trial.

Breivik had asked to wear a uniform in court in pretrial hearings but was rebuffed, and he appeared at the trial in a business suit and tie, his thinning hair neatly combed.

“We don't have orange jumpsuits and that kind of thing in Norway,” his lawyer, Geir Lippestad, said. “This is a completely normal way to dress in a Norwegian court, even in a serious criminal matter.”

Breivik's lawyers concede that his contention that he acted in self-defense is unlikely to succeed and said the main point was to avoid an insanity ruling, which Breivik contends would negate his cause.

In his testimony Tuesday, Breivik rejected suggestions that he has a narcissistic personality disorder.

“July 22 wasn't about me. July 22 was a suicide attack. I wasn't expecting to survive that day,” he said. “A narcissist would never have given his life for anyone or anything.”

Some victims' relatives were upset at his testimony.

“I think it's important to underline that we don't view Breivik as a politician in this matter. He is a mass murderer,” said Trond Henry Blattmann, whose 17-year-old son was killed on the Utoya resort island.

Some observers outside Norway found Breivik's monologue surprising in a criminal trial.

“What I see happening in Norway with Breivik's statement is a trial about politics, not legal evidence,” said Jeff Kass, who wrote a book about the 1999 Columbine High School shooting in Littleton, Colo.

He noted that in the United States, it's almost always the defense attorney — not the defendant — who does the talking.

“It is almost always considered a bad idea to have the defendant himself or herself testify. For one, it opens them up to too much questioning — as the prosecutor is now doing with Breivik,” Kass said.

The five-judge panel hearing the case includes three “citizen” judges, ordinary people who serve four-year terms. One citizen judge was removed Tuesday after media reports said he had posted comments in an online forum saying that Breivik deserved the death penalty, which doesn't exist in Norway. He was replaced by another citizen judge.

If found mentally sane — the key issue to be decided in the trial — Breivik could face a maximum 21-year prison sentence or an alternate custody arrangement that would keep him locked up as long as he is considered a menace to society.

If declared insane, he would be committed to psychiatric care for as long as he's considered ill.
